All Is

AT THE conclusion of the Eucharistic Prayer, the priest sings or says the Doxology, and all answer, “Amen”. Some people have questioned the grammar of this line: “Through him, and with him, and in him, / O God, almighty Father, / in the unity of the Holy Spirit, / all glory and honor is yours, / for ever and ever” (The Order of Mass, The Roman Missal). Shouldn’t it be “all glory and honor are yours”?

The word “all” commonly takes a plural verb in English, but there are occasions when it takes the singular. For example, you may say to someone you love, “All my possessions are yours.” But you could just as easily say, “All that I have is yours.” The word “All” takes “are” in the first sentence, but “is” in the second. You could also say, “Each and every thing I have is yours.”

The word “all” in the Doxology is a translation of the Latin word omnis, which is singular and usually means “each” or “every.” It has a plural form, omnes, which usually means “all.” In Latin, the Doxology says something like this: “each glory and [every] honor is yours.” The English translation has always chosen to simplify this by using the word “all” in its singular sense. It means something like this: “All glory is yours, and all honor is yours.” The plural verb “are” would not have changed the meaning (“all glory and honor are yours”), but the English translation usually tries to give you a sense of how the Latin expresses it.

No matter how you say it, God deserves all the glory and honor we can possibly contribute at the end of the Eucharistic Prayer.
